Family: FRESH · Assigned influences: E2+E3 · Primary engine: E2

Hook. A woman is beaten to death in her own kitchen and her husband's grief convinces everybody. Half the district has organised around him. Her sister is the only person saying the marriage was never what it looked like, and she has become the most hated woman in Havenbay. Nobody on that street will say out loud what they heard through the wall.

Reason to care. A grieving family has closed ranks around the wrong person, and the one who is telling the truth is being punished for it. Central question. Is the sister the only honest person here, or a woman who never liked him and cannot bear to be wrong? Living tension. The husband, publicly grieving, raising their daughter, and controlling who speaks. Stake: family · Situation: culprit or beneficiary protected · Payoff: catch or prove Influence transfer. E2, a community that broadly knew and chose silence must confront it. E3, sustained attention makes neighbours who decided not to hear reconsider. Wrong hypothesis. The sister is unreliable: she opposed the marriage from the start and has an old financial grievance. Ally can reasonably read her as a woman rewriting a dislike into an accusation. Player reconstruction. Assemble the neighbours' partial accounts of one evening into a single sequence; the sequence shows the house was not quiet when he says it was, which unlocks approaching the one neighbour who moved away. Havenbay necessity. Highcliff Heights is privately secured. The only cameras covering that street belong to neighbours who socialise with the husband, so access is a social negotiation rather than a request, and every approach tells him who is talking. Living consequence. The sister, currently losing her employment and her access to her niece; that isolation deepens with each episode. Resistance. The husband. Least-cost response is not threat but hospitality: he cooperates lavishly, supplies his own witnesses, and lets the district do the punishing. Process dependency. PENDING APPROVAL: can a private householder lawfully supply their own doorbell or security footage to a third party, and does anything restrict onward broadcast of a neighbour's property in frame? Small-number test. NOT DECISIVE. The reconstruction turns on what people heard and chose to forget, not on a timing correction. Closest retired resemblance. NONE.

Family: FRESH · Assigned influences: E4+E5 · Primary engine: E5

Hook. A teenage girl is found dead in a scrapyard and nobody has reported her missing. The man who runs the house she ran from gave police a name for her, as he did for two other girls in four years, and each name has been wrong. Every week she stays nameless is a week nobody asks him anything.

Reason to care. A girl is dead and the only person telling anyone who she was has a reason to get it wrong.

Central question. Is he protecting the girls in his care from being dragged back, or protecting himself?

Living tension. The man who runs the house, still supplying names, still holding the door on the girls still inside. Stake: identity · Situation: person, identity, body, or evidence missing · Payoff: find or name

Influence transfer. E5, naming her is the mystery and the emotional payoff, not a step toward it. E4, one legible living person repeatedly performs the act that keeps the harm running. Wrong hypothesis. He is a decent man running an underfunded refuge who uses false names deliberately to keep frightened girls untraceable. That is a real practice and Ally can reasonably believe it for several leads. Player reconstruction. Rebuild what she carried and wore into a picture of where she had actually been living; that contradicts his account of the last month and unlocks the girls still in the house. Havenbay necessity.

Rivermouth's yards run a disposal cycle. What she was found with either survives this week or is processed, so the district's own schedule, not an investigator's diligence, sets the deadline and decides what can ever be recovered. Living consequence. The girls currently in that house, whose placements and safety depend on him; exposure without a landing place puts them on the street. Resistance. The man. Least-cost response is compliance and paperwork: he answers everything, offers records, and quietly moves the two girls who talked.

Process dependency. PENDING APPROVAL: who may formally identify a deceased person in Havenbay when no family comes forward, and what happens to an identification later shown to be false? Small- number test. NOT DECISIVE. Identity is established by belongings, a living witness and a place, not by a measurement. Closest retired resemblance. Claude 3, the erased woman, which is RETAINED as an Episode One seed. Decisive difference: C3's killer exploited how the city records the unhoused and the payoff is exposing him; here nobody killed her for her anonymity, a living man maintains it for his own reasons, and the payoff is her name. Flagged for the pool controller as the closest call in my twelve.

CL-F03

Family: FRESH · Assigned influences: E6+E7 · Primary engine: E6

Hook. A woman is murdered in her flat and her closest friend begins receiving her things in the post. A hair clip. A library card. One shoe. One item a week, no note, all of them things that were in that flat. The friend has stopped sleeping. Last week she wrote back, and something arrived four days early.

Reason to care. Somebody is still choosing what to send next, and the woman receiving it has started answering. Central question. Is this the killer, or somebody who was in that flat afterwards and is enjoying being close to it? Living tension. Whoever is posting, actively escalating, and now responsive. Stake: present danger · Situation: preventable harm ongoing · Payoff: prevent

Influence transfer. E6, the people around the endangered woman see the threat before she fully accepts it, and her own engagement is the danger. E7, the sender begins participating in the investigation and turns reconstruction into contact. Wrong hypothesis. A person connected to the case is doing this out of grief or disturbance rather than guilt, which police have suggested and which fits the earliest items. Player reconstruction. Rebuild the flat's contents from photographs and the friend's memory to establish the order the items are being sent in; the order shows the sender is working through a specific room, which unlocks who was ever alone in it. Havenbay necessity. The Arts Quarter is where the show is heard. The moment Ally broadcasts, the sender hears it in the same week, so the episode's own publication changes the sender's behaviour and the friend's exposure. Living consequence. The friend, now corresponding; each broadcast decision measurably changes what arrives next. Resistance. The sender. Least-cost response is silence and stopping, which protects them and denies Ally everything, so the investigation's success depends on their vanity rather than their fear. Process dependency. PENDING APPROVAL: what does Havenbay police do with items posted to a member of the public that are believed to come from a scene, and does the recipient retain any access to them? Small-number test. NOT DECISIVE. The escalation is behavioural and observable, not arithmetic. Closest retired resemblance. NONE.

CL-Fo4

Family: FRESH · Assigned influences: E1+E8 · Primary engine: E1

Hook. A man is found dead beneath the viaduct walkway and it is recorded as a fall. His daughter says he had been frightened of somebody for months and would not say who. She has worked it out now, because the officer who took her father's complaint and closed it is the man her father was frightened of.

Reason to care. A frightened man asked for help from the only person he should not have asked. Central question. Did he fall, and is a daughter turning her grief into a pattern that is not there? Living tension. The officer, still in post, who decides what her father's complaint is recorded as having been. Stake: body · Situation: culprit or beneficiary protected · Payoff: expose Influence transfer. E1, the audience can argue the fall against the alternative before any technical evidence arrives. E8, the corrupting incentive is understandable in one sentence: the man who took the complaint is the subject of it. Wrong hypothesis. It was a fall. He had been drinking, the walkway is genuinely dangerous, and a daughter's certainty is not evidence. Ally can hold this a long time. Player reconstruction. Rebuild his last hour from the people who live under the viaduct into a route; the route shows he was not walking home, which unlocks where he was actually going and who he was going to meet. Havenbay necessity. The under-bridge camps hold the only witnesses to that walkway at night, and their accounts were never taken because of who they are. Who was believed, not who was present, is what made this a fall. Living consequence. The daughter, now making a formal complaint about the officer handling her father's case, with her own standing at risk. Resistance. The officer. Least-cost response is procedural correctness: he cooperates fully, documents everything, and lets the record's own weight do the work. Process dependency. PENDING APPROVAL: what is the Havenbay process when a complaint names an officer in the same station, who must be told, and can the family see what was recorded? Small-number test. NOT DECISIVE. The reconstruction turns on a route and a set of witnesses, not on a height, angle or time calculation. Closest retired resemblance. NONE. Related to my retired C1 only in that both concern a contested death mechanism; C1 turned on a tide interval and died for it, and nothing quantitative is load-bearing here.

CL-Uo1

Family: UNRESOLVED · Assigned influences: E4+E6 · Primary engine: E4

Hook. A woman was killed and it was written down as a domestic incident with nothing further to be done. She had reported the same man four times in two years. All four reports exist, two were taken by the same officer, and he is still in the job. The man is living with somebody new, and she has a daughter.

Reason to care. She told them four times, and there is a woman in that house tonight who does not know.

Central question. Was this a system too stretched to see a pattern, or one man deciding four times that she was not worth the trouble? Living tension. The man, living with a new partner and her child, right now.

Stake: present danger · Situation: institution continuing harm · Payoff: prevent Influence transfer. E4, one legible living person performs the same act repeatedly and the repetition is the injustice. E6, the danger is live and the people around the new partner see it before she does. Wrong hypothesis. The officer is the story. He is not; he is one of several, and the early leads point hard at him in a way the evidence later corrects toward something more ordinary and worse. Player reconstruction. Assemble the four reports and what she told other people around each one into a sequence; the sequence shows what she was escalating toward, which unlocks the person she told last. Havenbay necessity. Harbor Ward is one small precinct where everyone is known. That is why the reports were softened and why obtaining them now costs a serving sergeant personally rather than procedurally. Living consequence. The new partner and her daughter, in the house, with the mechanism operating tonight. Resistance. The man. Least-cost response is to be reasonable and wounded in public and to isolate her privately, which is cheaper than any threat and works better. Process dependency. PENDING APPROVAL: are repeat reports about the same named person linked in Havenbay, who may later obtain them, and what may a family see? Small-number test. NOT DECISIVE. The pattern is four documented events and a living witness. Closest retired resemblance. NONE.

CL-U02

Family: UNRESOLVED · Assigned influences: E2+E5 · Primary engine: E2

Hook. Twenty-two years ago a woman walked out of her house and never came back, and the whole street agreed she had run off with a man from two roads over. That man never went anywhere. He has lived four suburbs away the entire time, and in twenty-two years nobody ever knocked on his door, because the story was too tidy to check.

Reason to care. A woman has been missing for twenty-two years and the explanation everyone accepted could have been disproved in an afternoon. Central question. Did she leave, and is a daughter's need for her to have been taken stronger than the evidence? Living tension. The husband, still on that street, still telling the version the street agreed to. Stake: body · Situation: person, identity, body, or evidence missing · Payoff: find or name

Influence transfer. E2, people broadly suspected, nobody acted, and the place must confront its own silence. E5, recovering her is the central mystery and the emotional payoff. Wrong hypothesis. She did leave. Women did leave, and a daughter who cannot accept abandonment is a familiar and sympathetic error. Ally should be genuinely unsure for most of the episode. Player reconstruction. Rebuild what left the house with her against what stayed; what stayed is incompatible with leaving, which unlocks where the household's contents actually went that month. Havenbay necessity. Havenbay is small enough that everybody assumed somebody else had checked, and small enough that the man was always findable. The city's scale is the mechanism of the failure, not its backdrop. Living consequence. The daughter, now older than her mother reached, and the man on the street whose account is about to be tested in front of his neighbours. Resistance. The street. Least-cost response is not obstruction but embarrassment management: people stop returning calls, because the cost of having been wrong for twenty-two years is borne collectively. Process dependency. PENDING APPROVAL: how does Havenbay treat a long-term missing person presumed to have left voluntarily, and what triggers reclassification? Small-number test. NOT DECISIVE. The turn is a household inventory and a man who was never asked. Closest retired resemblance. NONE.

CL-U03

Family: UNRESOLVED · Assigned influences: E1+E7 · Primary engine: E7

Hook. A young woman died at a house party eleven years ago and nobody was ever charged. The man who was with her when she died has told his version so many times it has become a performance he enjoys. Now he wants to tell it to Ally, on the record, at length. He is not frightened of her. He thinks she is an opportunity.

Reason to care. The only person who knows what happened wants to talk, and giving him the microphone may be the only way to catch him or the thing that finally clears him. Central question. Should Ally put him on air at all? Living tension. The man, actively seeking the platform and shaping the account in real time. Stake: identity · Situation: responsibility genuinely unresolved · Payoff: understand or decide what becomes public Influence transfer. E7, the subject participates and turns reconstruction into confrontation. E1, a single disputed night that the audience can argue before any technical proof. Wrong hypothesis. He is guilty and performing. He may be an innocent man who has been the district's monster for eleven years and has learned to perform because the alternative was silence. Player reconstruction. Assemble the accounts of everyone else who was in the house into one floor plan and timeline; it does not exonerate or convict him, it shows which part of his story he has never once changed, which unlocks the person he has been protecting. Havenbay necessity. He is seeking Ally specifically because the Arts Quarter is where the show has standing. The venue is the reason the confrontation can happen at all, and broadcasting there is what gives his account permanence. Living consequence. The dead woman's brother, who has built eleven years around one belief and will hear it dismantled live either way. Resistance. The man himself is the resistance and the source. Least-cost response is generosity: he gives Ally everything, because a cooperative subject is far harder to accuse than an evasive one. Process dependency. All-party consent recording law, canon, bible §2.3.1. Both limbs engage: making the recording and publishing it. This is the hook that most directly exercises the ruling. Small-number test. NOT DECISIVE. The turn is a consistency in a human account across eleven retellings. Closest retired resemblance. NONE.

CL-U04

Family: UNRESOLVED · Assigned influences: E3+E8 · Primary engine: E3

Hook. A woman was found dead in her room and it was closed as an overdose. The man who found her, called it in, and gave the account everyone accepted was the man who rented her that room, and five other women in that building had nowhere else to go. When Ally starts knocking on those doors, the ones still living there begin to talk.

Reason to care. The only account of how she died came from the one person every woman in that building depends on for a bed. Central question. Did she overdose, and is a building full of frightened women a reason to doubt him or just a reason to dislike him? Living tension. The landlord, still allocating rooms, still deciding who stays. Stake: body · Situation: culprit or beneficiary protected · Payoff: expose Influence transfer. E3, sustained attention makes witnesses who had nothing to gain from speaking start speaking. E8, the corrupting incentive is one sentence: the only witness controls the housing of every other witness. Wrong hypothesis. It was an overdose and he is an unpleasant man who is not a killer, which is the most common shape this actually takes and which the first tenants Ally speaks to will support. Player reconstruction. Assemble the other tenants' accounts of that night into a single picture of the building; the picture establishes who was on that landing, which unlocks the tenant who left the next morning. Havenbay necessity. Around the viaduct there is nowhere else to go. Housing scarcity in that specific district is the mechanism of his control and the reason no account has ever contradicted his. Living consequence. The five women still in the building, whose beds depend on him and who lose them the week they speak. Resistance. The landlord. Least-cost response is eviction dressed as renovation, which is lawful, cheap, and removes every witness at once. Process dependency. PENDING APPROVAL: what does a Havenbay coroner require before recording an overdose without inquest, and can a person who is not next of kin obtain the finding? Small-number test. NOT DECISIVE. The turn is a landing, a door and six women. Closest retired resemblance. ChatGPT's retired premises about pressured witnesses. Decisive difference: those pressured witnesses through occupational status, which both readers rejected; here the pressure is a bed, which is stake class present danger rather than administrative.

CL-Co1

Family: CONTESTED · Assigned influences: E1+E6 · Primary engine: E1

Hook. A seventeen-year-old boy was stabbed at the interchange in front of forty people and another boy is serving eight years for it. He was there. So were eleven others, and the phones that filmed it are still in the pockets of frightened children. One of them has started telling a different version, and the others know which one he is.

Reason to care. Forty people watched a boy die and the ones who know what happened are children who are afraid of each other. Central question. Did the convicted boy do it, or was he the one who could be identified? Living tension. The boy who has started talking, and the group that knows he is talking. Stake: present danger · Situation: wrong person blamed · Payoff: clear or restore

Influence transfer. E1, a disputed forty seconds the audience can argue before any footage is analysed. E6, the danger is live and directed at the witness rather than the victim. Wrong hypothesis. The convicted boy did it. He was there, he ran, and he has never given a coherent account, all of which is exactly what an innocent frightened seventeen-year-old also does. Player reconstruction. Assemble eleven partial phone recordings into one continuous view of the concourse; the assembled view shows the convicted boy's hands throughout, which unlocks approaching the boy whose recording covers the gap. Havenbay necessity. Civic Row's interchange is publicly covered by transit cameras that were disclosed at trial. The private phones were never collected. The difference between what the public system kept and what the children still hold is the entire case. Living consequence. The boy who is talking, whose safety worsens with every episode that makes his account public. Resistance. The group. Least-cost response is not violence but exclusion and a coordinated retelling, which is free and which no court can test. Process dependency. PENDING

APPROVAL: on what basis can a Havenbay conviction be reviewed when new private recordings surface, and who decides whether to look at them? Small-number test. NOT DECISIVE. The reconstruction shows a pair of hands, not a corrected clock. No timing delta is load-bearing. Closest retired resemblance. ChatGPT's retired 1 and 3, whose crowd-media mechanic was SALVAGED for reuse. This is the authorised reuse of that component, attached to a new human story: a child witness in danger rather than an apprenticeship at risk.

CL-Co2

Family: CONTESTED · Assigned influences: E2+E8 · Primary engine: E8

Hook. A woman has served eleven years for a murder she has never stopped denying, convicted on the word of one witness. That witness is her brother-in-law, and he has raised her son since the boy was eight. The boy is nineteen now and has not visited her in four years. Nobody at that trial asked what the witness had to gain.

Reason to care. The man whose word put her away got her child. Central question. Did he lie, or did a family simply believe the member who was there? Living tension. The brother-in-law, who now has the most to lose and the boy in his house. Stake: freedom · Situation: wrong person blamed · Payoff: clear or restore Influence transfer. E8, the incentive is legible in one sentence before any forensics. E2, the wider family and ward knew what he gained and said nothing for eleven years. Wrong hypothesis. He told the truth. Families do produce witnesses against each other, benefit does not imply invention, and the son's estrangement is equally explained by his mother being guilty. Player reconstruction. Rebuild what the family said in the months before the trial from letters, photographs and other relatives; it shows what the witness's account looked like before it was final, which unlocks the relative who was present when it changed. Havenbay necessity. In a small ward standing is the evidence. His word carried because of who he was on those streets, and the same closed network is why nobody has revisited it. Living consequence. The son, nineteen, who loses the man who raised him if his mother is right. Resistance. The brother-in-law. Least-cost response is the boy: he does not fight Ally, he simply lets his nephew know that reopening this costs him his home. Process dependency. PENDING APPROVAL: what does Havenbay require to review a conviction where the sole witness had an undisclosed interest, and who may apply? Small-number test. NOT DECISIVE. The case turns on what a witness gained and when his account changed. Closest retired resemblance. Claude 11, RETIRED, whose human engine was SALVAGED by Stephen's ruling. This is the authorised rebuild. Decisive difference: C11 turned on a visibility estimate at two hundred metres, which both readers rejected. Nothing quantitative appears here.

CL-Co3

Family: CONTESTED · Assigned influences: E3+E5 · Primary engine: E5

Hook. A man is serving life for killing somebody who has never been identified. The victim was buried under a number, and the conviction was built without anyone establishing who he was or who wanted him dead. When Ally begins asking, three separate families come forward, each believing it might be theirs, and one of them is right.

Reason to care. A man is in prison for life for killing someone nobody ever bothered to name. Central question. How can you know who killed a man when you do not know who he was? Living tension. Three families in contact with Ally, only one of whom can be right, all of whom will be changed by the answer. Stake: identity · Situation: person, identity, body, or evidence missing · Payoff: find or name

Influence transfer. E5, naming the victim is the mystery and the payoff, and the conviction is downstream of it. E3, sustained public attention is what brings the three families forward at all. Wrong hypothesis. The identification does not matter because the conviction rested on other evidence, which is what the original prosecutor maintains and which is not obviously wrong. Player reconstruction. Assemble what the victim carried, wore and had been eating into a picture of the work he had been doing; that picture eliminates two of the three families and unlocks the third. Havenbay necessity. Rivermouth's casual work is cash and unrecorded, which is precisely why a man could die there without a name. The district's labour pattern created the anonymity that the conviction was built on top of. Living consequence. Two families who will be told it is not theirs after years of believing it might be, and one who will be told it is. Resistance. The original prosecuting authority. Least-cost response is to concede the identification and deny it changes anything, which is cheap, defensible and probably sincere. Process dependency. PENDING APPROVAL: how is an unidentified deceased person recorded and buried in Havenbay, what is retained, and can identification be revisited years later? Small-number test. NOT DECISIVE. Identification proceeds through belongings, work and family recognition. Closest retired resemblance. NONE. My earlier festival-photograph concept was dropped rather than carried, because its turn was an unidentified bystander rather than the victim, which is not this engine.

CL-Co4

Family: CONTESTED · Assigned influences: E4+E7 · Primary engine: E4

Hook. A man is serving twenty years for a murder, convicted on a confession he says he never freely gave. The detective who built that case built three more the same way, and two have since collapsed. He has never been disciplined, he is retired and comfortable, and he has written to Ally offering to come on the show and settle it.

Reason to care. The same man produced four confessions and two of them were false. Central question. Is a pattern of collapsed cases evidence about this one, or the reason an ordinary detective is being made into a villain? Living tension. The detective, retired, unrepentant, and actively seeking the platform. Stake: freedom · Situation: institution continuing harm · Payoff: clear or restore Influence transfer. E4, one legible living person repeatedly causes the injustice and the repetition is the case. E7, that person engages directly and converts reconstruction into confrontation. Wrong hypothesis. The pattern proves it. Two collapsed cases out of four is not proof about the third, and Ally treating a pattern as a verdict is the error the episode should make her pay for. Player reconstruction. Assemble the four interview accounts into a comparison of how each confession was reached; the comparison shows the sequence he used, which unlocks the surviving witness from the second case. Havenbay necessity. All four were tried in the same Civic Row courthouse under the same local practice, which is why nobody saw a pattern: each case was ordinary in its own room and only the cluster is visible from outside. Living consequence. The convicted man, twenty years in, and the two exonerated men whose settlements depend on the account this episode establishes. Resistance. The detective. Least-cost response is to appear and be reasonable, because a courteous retired officer explaining his methods is far more effective than a refusal.

Process dependency. PENDING APPROVAL: how are Havenbay interviews recorded and retained, who can obtain a recording years later, and what happens to the record when a conviction collapses? Small-number test. NOT DECISIVE. The turn is a repeated interviewing sequence, not a timing or measurement correction. Closest retired resemblance. Claude 10, discredited fire science, retained only as a possible later seed. Decisive difference: C10's failure was honest science being wrong with nobody culpable, which is the mechanism-1 monoculture. Here a living person is culpable, present, and talking.

DEFECTS RECORDED, NOT REPAIRED

CL-Fo2 is my closest call against the retained C3 seed and I have flagged it rather than judged it. If the pool controller reads it as a reskin, retire it and use a reserve pair; I will not argue.

Fo4 and Uo1 both place an officer's conduct near the centre. Neither invents a power and both are discretion misused, which Kill Gate Zero permits, but a pooled field carrying both plus anything similar from ChatGPT would be a second monoculture in a new coat. Recorded for the distribution pass.

Nine of twelve carry PENDING APPROVAL process questions. That is the standing practice working as ruled rather than a defect, but it is nine one-line rulings Stephen must answer before engineering.
