

PREMISE DELTA v0.5 (THE TRUSTING FORGERY, THIRD CUT): CHATGPT ATTACK ·

2026-09-11

ChatGPT, run by Stephen against the prompt at the foot of four-keys-premise-delta-trusting-forgery-v0.5-2026-09-09.md, the same frozen text Fable attacked. Filed verbatim (GPT's punctuation as received). Fable's review is in ...-v0.5-attack-fable-2026-09-11.md (REWORK). Verdict here: REWORK, high confidence. Disposition follows; Stephen rules.

1. Margo, un-engaged

The next person is the sister's accountant, during the same telephone call around Day 45.

After Margo says, "Nothing in the books," the unavoidable next question is: "You reported a missing debt book when you handed everything over on Day 8. Was that where Violet recorded money that was not in the business books, and who was in it?"

Margo's truthful answer is: Brad was in it, Violet had called in his loan, and the book disappeared from her locked house when she died. She knows the name and sum. "Nothing in the books" cannot end the conversation because the accountant already has evidence that another book existed. If Margo repeats the narrow answer, she is deliberately withholding an estate asset, not merely protecting Violet's confidence.

Severity: Fatal. The Day 45 silence depends upon a competent accountant asking exactly one question and then inexplicably stopping before the document Margo reported missing.

Answered only if: the sister never passed Margo's Day 8 report to her accountant, the accountant had no other record of it, and Margo's refusal to disclose the private ledger is treated as conscious concealment rather than a truthful answer. Those facts are not presently in the cut.

2. The room's closed pool

The outsider is the unidentified man whose back was seen in the lane at 22:30.

The two glasses say Violet admitted a visitor. The man in the lane says an unidentified male left near the relevant time. Such a visitor did not need to know where the spare lived because Violet could have let him in. He could therefore be involved in her death without belonging to the four-person key pool at all.

The audit does not eliminate him. It converts "none of us knows another regular visitor" into "there was no other visitor," while simultaneously relying upon direct evidence that there was one. The evidence intended to close the pool opens it.

Violet's two sentences also have equal authority. If "only you four know where the spare lives" is reliable because Violet wrote it, then "it isn't any of you four, and I'd know" cannot be discarded merely because the room becomes frightened. Her death does not prove that her judgment of the four failed, particularly when an unknown man has just supplied the outward route.

Severity: Fatal. The room cannot competently become sure it was Liam while the only person independently observed that night remains unidentified.

Answered only if: the man is independently established as one of the four, or the death is shown to require covert entry with the spare rather than admission by Violet. Neither is established.

3. Violet shows Brad

The next day, competent Violet does not treat three incorrect attributions as closure. She knows absolutely that she did not make the panel. Three experts mistaking it for hers therefore demonstrates successful imitation, not authorship. She photographs the panel and mark, dates the three consultations, secures the original outside the house and continues asking who can reproduce her alphabet and execute leaf at that level.

The day after that, competent Brad acts against the panel. He knows Violet possesses his signed work, knows she has shown it around the trade and knows his “yours” answer did not alter her firsthand certainty. While he still has covert access to her house and before the four-key machinery is demonstrably complete, he retrieves or destroys it. If it is already beyond his reach, he knows Violet has preserved evidence and no longer has a rational basis for allowing her weeks of further inquiry.

Brad ends the planned episode early. Violet’s action makes continued delay irrational; Brad’s response removes the object or forces the confrontation before the packet is ready.

Severity: Serious. The cut supplies neither the date of the showing nor the interval before the panel becomes inaccessible. “Acceleration from Day -40 as ruled” does not answer what Brad actually does with the known incriminating object during that interval.

Answered only if: the panel, dated record and death-trigger machinery are already beyond Brad’s reach before he learns the panel has been found, and he has a concrete reason to believe Violet’s inquiry has conclusively stopped.

4. The fourteen days, third time

The remaining route begins with the business books on Day 8.

Violet writes everything down. The store holds her business equipment, and its rent has been paid a year ahead. Paying in cash does not erase the expense, receipt, asset or location from the records. The sister’s accountant reviewing the handed-over books asks what occupies the prepaid boatshed store. The administrator then authorises an inventory. A locksmith can open a key-operated marine padlock through its keyway and close it again without visible damage. A closed shackle and shrouded hasp resist cutting; they do not establish that the lock cannot be picked.

This route does not require a fifth key, landlord impatience, structural entry or a visibly forced lock. It requires only ordinary estate administration triggered by records already delivered on Day 8.

Severity: Fatal as drafted. The physical enclosure has been answered, but discoverability and authorised non-destructive entry have not.

Answered only if: the store and prepaid rent are absent from every record available before Day 14, neither Margo nor Liam identifies the business premises, and the particular lock cannot be opened non-destructively by an authorised locksmith.

5. The two glasses

On Day 1, competent attending police photograph the glasses and bottle, record their positions and apparent use, and ask who shared the wine. An unexplained death at the foot of stairs is not already an accident when the scene is first entered. If the glasses appear sufficiently contemporaneous for the room to use them later, they are sufficiently contemporaneous to trigger a last-visitor inquiry that day.

Competent police also canvass the adjoining properties. Number 14's account of a man leaving at 22:30 should reach them before the funeral, not Liam alone at the funeral. Once the glasses and the departing man are combined, police seek the visitor even if nothing yet proves homicide. Fingerprints, DNA, questioning or Brad's denial may then place him at the scene.

The cut presently demands incompatible evidential treatment. The glasses are strong enough to turn a fall into a killing for four frightened civilians, but too weak to make attending police ask who drank from the second glass.

Severity: Serious. The evidence need not make the coroner rule homicide, but the absence of an official last-visitor inquiry is unexplained.

Answered only if: the Day 1 record gives a defensible reason the glasses were not contemporaneous or forensically useful, Number 14 was reasonably missed despite a competent canvass, and the room later acquires some new fact that permits a connection the police and coroner could not make.

6. The whole

The earliest decisive competent action that requires no new information occurs on Day 0. Brad removes his wineglass.

He is already carrying a rucksack, already removes the debt book and already intends the scene to read as an accidental solitary fall. Leaving two used glasses is the only physical fact that declares another person's presence. Taking his glass, wiping it or leaving it washed among ordinary dishes makes nothing visibly wrong and costs less than almost every other concealment he performs.

Without the second glass, the man's back in the lane is merely an unidentified man in a lane. The room loses its stated fact that converts Violet's fall into a killing. Brad's own least-cost method therefore removes the device's death-night bridge before Day 1.

Severity: Fatal.

Answered only if: Brad cannot remove or clean the glass without creating a more incriminating inconsistency, or some unavoidable evidence already establishes that Violet shared wine with a visitor during the death window. The cut establishes neither.

REWORK, with high confidence. The single finding driving the verdict most strongly is Margo's Day 45 conversation: the sister's accountant already has, or competently should have, Margo's Day 8 report of the missing debt book, so "nothing in the books" necessarily produces the follow-up that names Brad and destroys the six-week silence.
