

ALLY QUINN: ECHOES OF HAVENBAY

Episode 1 — "The Listener" · Production Script

Compiled directly from the live in-game dialogue assets · v1.1 line state

Includes: v1.1 polish pass (L1–L4) · "Off the Books" (Del debut, L4^{1/2}) · Kestrel Corner Diner rename · em-dash sweep

79 script lines across 13 leads · 2026-08-05 · Indigo Chimp Studios

L1 • e1_tip — "The Tip Line" (Podcast, VO) • Day 1, Monday

1	Tip line	"Message received: Thursday, two fifty-one a.m."
2	Dot Ellis (voicemail)	(happy) It's Dot from Rivermouth, love. Nothing much worth troubling you with. The gulls held a squabble on my roof, and the quiet boats went by twice. Say goodnight to the harbour for me, Ally.
3	Tip line	"Message received: Friday, three oh-four a.m."
4	Tip line	[An excerpt from her final message. Muffled movement inside a house. A strained metallic sound. An engine idling somewhere outside. It cuts off.]
5	Ally Quinn	I end my show the same way every time: please comment, DM me, or call the tip-line number, for the things you can't, or won't, put your name to. Tell me what this city won't. The line keeps voices, timestamps and nothing else. That's my promise. Now I have a problem. Every night for three years, every single night, Dot called that line to say goodnight.
6	Ally Quinn	(sad) Three nights ago, at 3:04 on Friday morning, she left the message you just heard a piece of. Forty seconds. No words. She called the line, then let the house speak for her. It sat unheard for three days in my queue. I was busy prepping today's show. And since Friday: nothing.
7	Ally Quinn	Dot, if you're hearing this: goodnight, the harbour misses you. Everyone else: this is Echoes of Havenbay. As always, the tip line is open. That last message was meant for me. This time, I'm listening. To every second of it.

1	Ally Quinn	I loaded the whole of Friday's message into the studio. I've analysed all forty seconds, one sound at a time.
2	Ally Quinn	First: a floorboard, twice. The same squeak opens all of her older messages, the same three footsteps before she starts talking. Her hall, by the phone. I've never seen it. I've heard it a thousand times. Whoever moved on Friday was standing where Dot stands to talk to me.
3	Ally Quinn	Then a strained spring. A door, opened slowly. The way you open one you don't want heard. And outside, faint but steady: a diesel engine, idling. Waiting for somebody.
4	Ally Quinn	(surprised) The steps are the tell. Eight of them, unhurried, and every second one lands harder. It sounds like a limp. But I can't be sure. Yet.
5	Ally Quinn	Somebody uninvited was in Dot's house at three in the morning. She kept the line open and her mouth shut, braver in those forty seconds than most of us can ever manage.
6	Ally Quinn	(worried) And here's what three years of goodnights never gave me: her face. Her full name. Her address. I couldn't pick Dot out of a bus queue. Today, that changes. Let's find her.

- | | | |
|---|-------------------|--|
| 1 | Ally Quinn | Three years of messages, most under a minute. I'd often pick one to close the show. Dot knew: she'd hear herself on the next episode, and answer in the next message. "Play the one about the gulls," she said in one of them. "I was very good in that one." |
| 2 | Ally Quinn | Tonight they're not a heartwarming outro. They're pins on a map. A school bell in the daytime messages, so close she'd need to raise her voice over it. And under the late calls, a low mechanical note every twenty-odd seconds. |
| 3 | Ally Quinn | (worried) And the boats. She loved the boats. Years of them, mentioned like weather. Then three weeks ago, her tone was different: "the pretty one came very close tonight. Two-note horn, no lights, and a funny mark on the funnel, like a fish-hook." I played that one on the show. |
| 4 | Ally Quinn | A school bell she had to talk over. A machine that breathes every twenty seconds. Grandad has heard every sound this city has ever made. Time to buy Gerald a drink. |

L4 • e1_bridge — "The Volume-Up" (Discuss — Gerald) • Day 2, Tuesday

1	Mo Callahan	(happy) Well, look what the tide brings. The corner booth, my lovely. Where else would he be? Go on through. I'll bring the usuals.
2	Ally Quinn	Grandad hugs like he's checking for broken ribs. Once I'd passed inspection, I handed him the headphones, plugged them into my phone, and told him what was on them. He didn't flinch. He turned the volume up.
3	Gerald Quinn	Loop the low note for me, love. Just that. Nothing else in my ears.
4	Ally Quinn	I'd already split the recording into separate tracks, one for every sound in her hall. I set the low note looping, alone. He counted under his breath, pencil ticking the table. Then he took the headphones off. Twenty-two seconds.
5	Gerald Quinn	(worried) That's the old pump house at Rivermouth reach. It clears the channel when the tide drops. One breath every twenty-two seconds. Your Dot sleeps close enough to hear it. Mind how you go down there.
6	Ally Quinn	On the way out, I played Mo a few seconds of Dot's voice. She stopped polishing the glass.
7	Mo Callahan	(worried) Dorothy Ellis. Cleaned Chandler Road school for thirty years. Quiz night tonight, table six. She's never once missed it.
8	Ally Quinn	Okay. Rivermouth. Chandler Road. We're getting closer.

1	Ally Quinn	Harbor Ward, end of shift. Del's table outside the Kestrel Corner Diner: back to the wall, eyes on the street, the crossing, and everyone's hands. Del doesn't relax. She just picks better sightlines. Coffee makes you a friend at that table. A notebook makes you an investigator. I brought us coffee.
2	Del Cruz	You've got your working face on, Quinny. The coffee doesn't hide it.
3	Ally Quinn	I gave her the shape of it: a regular caller gone quiet, played her the wordless message from three in the morning, gave her the name from Mo. Dorothy Ellis, Rivermouth. Then I asked her for the smallest favour a badge can do: a knock on a door.
4	Del Cruz	You know a person's allowed to go quiet, Ally. That's not a crime, it's a right. But a welfare check is a knock, and knocking's free. I'll take the knock myself, after shift. You keep me out of the show, Quinny, and I'll keep you off the paperwork.
5	Ally Quinn	(sad) By dark, she'd called me back. Knocked twice, walked the fence, curtains shut, nothing forced, no answer. Logged and closed. She read me the words "no evident risk" the way you read out a lie someone else wrote.
6	Del Cruz	And obviously I can't hand a private address to a civilian. You know that. Nice road, though, Chandler. There's a blue gate at eleven with a garden like a postcard. You'd think somebody really loved the place.
7	Del Cruz	(worried) And Ally? If your gut's right, you won't be the first visitor that house has had this week. Stick to daylight, and take your grandad if you can.
8	Ally Quinn	Some people hand you a key by describing the lock. Del's been doing it for me since I was thirteen. Tonight I tell the city her name. Not her address, and not where I got it. Tomorrow: the blue gate at eleven, and the neighbours on Chandler Road.

- | | | |
|---|-------------------|---|
| 1 | Ally Quinn | This is Echoes of Havenbay. I'm Ally, here with a case alert. It's about a friend of ours. You've heard her say goodnight for three years: her name is Dot Ellis, from Rivermouth. What we know: at 3:04 on Friday morning, someone uninvited was inside her house. She hasn't been heard from since. |
| 2 | Ally Quinn | Havenbay PD have her name. They knocked, walked the fence, and got silence. So it's logged: a welfare check, no forced entry, no report from family. And an adult is allowed to leave home without explaining herself. They won't call it an abduction. I'm not asking them to. Yet. |
| 3 | Ally Quinn | (worried) So we do what this show does. We knock on Rivermouth's doors ourselves. And you'll notice I'm not saying her street on this feed. If you knew Dot Ellis, the tip line is open, and it keeps no names. |
| 4 | Ally Quinn | One more thing, for whoever needs to hear it. She left us your footsteps. Eight of them. Eight steps too slow to stay invisible. That was Friday. We're faster now. |
-

L6 • e1_cottage — "The Cold Kettle" (Evidence) • Day 3, Wednesday

- | | | |
|---|-------------------|--|
| 1 | Ally Quinn | Eleven Chandler Road. A blue gate, a garden kept the way you keep a promise. And Dot's car in the drive, dry ground beneath it. It hasn't moved since before the rain. |
| 2 | Ally Quinn | Mrs. Vale next door has held the spare key for years. Dot's own arrangement: if the curtains stayed shut and she couldn't raise her, use it. She couldn't, and hadn't for days. She went in first. I followed. |
| 3 | Ally Quinn | (sad) Kettle cold. Bed made. Reading glasses gone, coat gone, the little case she took to church gone. She packed. Quick, in the dark, but she packed. You don't pack for the river. |
| 4 | Ally Quinn | (surprised) The hall table: her phone charger, empty. The phone was gone. I hoped that meant it went with her. And on the cradle, dead centre, where the phone should sleep: a coin. Old brass, worn smooth. Placed. Not dropped. |
| 5 | Ally Quinn | (worried) I didn't touch it. I photographed where it lay, backed us both out of the hall, and kept the room untouched until Del arrived. Gerald's answer to the photo took a full minute: "Where was it." Then: "Don't put that on the show, love." |
| 6 | Ally Quinn | I've heard my grandfather discuss murders with his mouth full. I've never heard him go quiet. Back to work. |
-

L7 • e1_inspector — "The Man Who Came at Noon" (Interview) • Day 3

1	Ally Quinn	Rivermouth doors open for coffee and a box from the Kestrel Corner. They packed it heavy when they heard why. Mrs. Vale remembered him without prompting: a gas man, eight days before Friday's message, lanyard doing the work. No company name she knew. Nobody had scheduled anything.
2	Ally Quinn	(surprised) Her doorbell camera kept eleven seconds of him. Tall. Careful. Face angled off-lens like a man with practice. Every second step lands heavier. The house wasn't imagining. At the kerb, a pale van, left rear lamp dead. And as it pulled away, one clean frame of the rear plate.
3	Ally Quinn	(worried) He went to Dot's door first. Twenty minutes inside, in daylight. My working theory: the first visit mapped what her window could see. The second came back for whatever she'd kept of it.
4	Ally Quinn	Whether he came to frighten her, or silence her, or worse: I don't get to know that yet, and neither do you. What I know: he plans, he returns, and he's on camera. Eleven seconds, a dead lamp and one clean plate are more than he ever meant anyone to have.

L8 • e1_boats — "The Quiet Boats" (Money Trail) • Day 3

1	Ally Quinn	Back to the archive with worse eyes. Every boat mention, three years, laid end to end. Low in the water going out. Riding high coming back. No manifest ever filed for a night crossing on that reach. But the mooring fees are paid, in cash, quarterly, by a company with no phone number. Cargo that doesn't exist, paid for by money that does.
2	Ally Quinn	Insomnia made Dot a scientist. Same window, same hours, decades of nights. She wasn't spying. She just knew what belonged on her river, and said hello to what didn't.
3	Ally Quinn	(surprised) Three weeks ago: the pretty one, close in. Two-note horn. A fish-hook mark on the funnel. I played it on the show with her blessing and thought it was charming.
4	Ally Quinn	(angry) Ten days after I aired the fish-hook message, a fake inspector mapped her window. If he found her through the show, then I handed him the window. Episode forty-one, closing minute, my voice, her view. And if he's a listener, he's heard everything I've said since.

L9 • e1_delcruz — "Off the Record" (Interview — THE BRANCH) • Day 4,
Thursday

1	Ally Quinn	Sergeant Del Cruz, Harbor Ward, her lunch break, her bench, back to the water. I laid it out: the forty seconds, the inspector, the van, the coin now in her evidence intake.
2	Del Cruz	I can open the missing-person file: empty house, packed bag, that footage. That's real. What I can't do is turn your theory about boats into warrants. Not on a podcast's say-so.
3	Ally Quinn	(worried) Then the question that cuts this episode in half. He already knows I heard him. I told the whole city I have his footsteps. What he doesn't know is how cleanly. The full track holds his engine, his gait, the room itself. Publish it, and ten thousand ears go to work. So does he.
4	Del Cruz	Your show, your call. Just don't pretend silence is neutral either.
5	Ally Quinn	We released it at noon. By mid-afternoon, a retired Harbourline fleet mechanic had named the engine: the governor retrofit their vans carried after the '09 recall. Hours, not days. The cost came with it: two hundred false sightings, and the van off the streets by dusk.
6	Ally Quinn	We published the transcript and held the audio. By evening Del had walked the clean copy and the plate through properly: the plate is registered to a shell contractor, but the VIN traces back to a van last registered to Harbourline. Slower than the crowd. Cleaner than the noise. And he still doesn't know what we hold.
7	Ally Quinn	Either way, one thing rides with me now: how you tell the truth is also who you are. Dot's still out there, and her car never left the drive. So how does a frightened woman with a church case leave town?

1	Ally Quinn	The cottage told us she left. Now, where. A pharmacy bag folded flat in the kitchen drawer: St. Brigid's Pharmacy, Larkhill. A town I had to look up.
2	Ally Quinn	(surprised) And the queue paid its way through the noise: between the ghosts, three callers knew that governor whine, and two of them drive for a living. The van is real to the city now. So is she.
3	Ally Quinn	(surprised) And Del's quiet trace held: the shell contractor's paperwork leads nowhere alive, which is its own kind of answer. Nobody knows we know. The van has a history, and histories have habits.
4	Ally Quinn	Tucked inside the parish newsletter on her mantel, a Christmas card in someone else's hand. "The hills are quiet. You'd hate it. - V." The first evidence that Vera was more than a name Dot mentioned when she was feeling guilty. And folded into the same newsletter, a bus timetable: one morning service from Rivermouth passes through Larkhill.
5	Ally Quinn	The morning driver remembered her: the only passenger to ask for Chapel Lane before sunrise, church case on her lap. Chapel Lane, Larkhill. I'm driving up at first light. If I'm wrong, it's a long quiet road to be wrong on.

1	Ally Quinn	(worried) Fog all the way up, the kind that swallows headlights whole. I found the church, then Chapel Lane. And before I saw anything at all, I heard it: a diesel, idling, somewhere behind the white.
2	Ally Quinn	(worried) Through the fog, for two seconds, it moved: a pale van pulling away without lights. One rear lamp dead: the same dead lamp caught in Mrs. Vale's eleven seconds of footage. I stood in the road and let it go. A gate was in reach and a van wasn't.
3	Ally Quinn	(worried) The cottage door opened before I reached the step: a shape behind the lace curtain, small and absolutely unbothered.
4	Dot Ellis	You always did make a production of things. I heard the gate. Vera heard the gate. The church heard the gate. Come in, love. You're letting the hill in.
5	Dot Ellis	(angry) And before you say sorry, say it properly: you turned my window into a broadcast, Ally Quinn. My river. My own silly voice. And I still called your line that night. You know why? I knew you'd hear it. Eventually.
6	Dot Ellis	I went out through the allotments and caught the first bus. Phone switched off since: the fake gas man handled it at noon, and I wasn't leading him to Vera. Your number was the one I could dial in the dark. I needed the sound somewhere he couldn't take it.
7	Ally Quinn	(sad) I said I was sorry. Properly. No microphone, no defence, while Vera pretended the kettle needed watching. Then I told them about the van.
8	Ally Quinn	Del had a unit on Chapel Lane before that kettle boiled, and Dot and Vera spent the night somewhere the van doesn't know. She's safe tonight. "Tonight" is doing a lot of work in that sentence.

L12 · e1_close — "Goodnight, Harbour" (Podcast, VO — milestone) · Day 6,
Saturday

1	Ally Quinn	This is Echoes of Havenbay. Dot Ellis is safe. She was found through the life she left in plain sight: a school, a parish, a bus route, and three years of messages nobody had thought to treat as evidence. She declined an interview. Her words: "I'm not content, love. I'm a person."
2	Ally Quinn	(worried) On the record: the van traces to Harbourline Security, dissolved in 2011, still driving. You heard the full track when we did, and it worked, and it cost: two hundred ghosts in the queue, and the van gone before police reached it. Loud truth. I'd choose it again. I think.
3	Ally Quinn	(worried) On the record: the van traces to a dissolved port-security company. Del has asked me to keep its name off this feed. And this time, I'm listening. Quiet truth cost an afternoon of silence I don't want to spend again. I'd choose it again. I think.
4	Ally Quinn	And one thing changes at this show, starting tonight: a voice can tell us where to look without me telling everyone else where it lives. That's the new rule. Dot wrote it; I'm just reading it out.
5	Ally Quinn	(worried) And now, not as a reporter, but to the man with the careful walk: this show is built on listening. This case taught me who else does. She's safe. The evidence is safe. You're the only one still hiding.
6	Dot Ellis (voicemail)	(happy) It's Dot. Not from Rivermouth tonight. Imagine that. Vera says hello, which for Vera is a parade. You found an old woman who didn't want a fuss and you made one anyway. Good girl. Say goodnight to the harbour for me, Ally.
7	Ally Quinn	Goodnight, Dot. Goodnight, harbour. The tip line stays open.
8	...	[Somewhere: this episode, playing. A click. Silence. A diesel engine starts.]